A fairytale-esque story about the merits of curiosity.

Mama Susa warns her little piglets not to go into the woods, for there are monsters that might eat them and paths that could lead them astray. Nine little piglets are frightened and scared, one perks up: Adventures? That's just right down its alley! And so the little piglet sets out into the woods – and adventures are not long in coming, for there's a truth to every warning. It might just not be quite as expected ...

Creative People:

Author: At the age of four, Gundi Herget got the impression that books with all their many pages full of black dashes, dots and whorls could be the most exciting thing on the planet. At the age of ten, she wanted to become a writer but first made her A-levels, studied in Munich and Pisa, learned to play percussions and how to be an editor, travelled the world and had a child, which reminded her of her childhood resolution. She has been writing children's books ever since.

Illustrator: Kai Schüttler, born in 1988, studied design with a focus on illustration at the FH Münster and graduated in 2013. He lives and works in Steinfurt where pictures for children's and YA books, magazines, posters and many more come into being in his room under the rooftop.
