The perfect mix: A story of family, friendship, and mental illness told in hilarious incidents and soft, melancholic tones.

One day, Josh's life is about as normal as can be considering he had to drop out of school to help his dad run the family-owned hotel when his brother emigrated to New Zealand. The next, his father is simply gone, turning Josh's life on its head. Fortunately, he can count on his friends Lasse and Fips, and – quite unexpectedly – Kia, the weirdest girl in town. They try to put together the pieces of a broken past in the hopes of finding a trace. Kia has her own wild theories and is convinced Josh's father didn't just walk out the door. And while Josh doesn't believe in the supernatural, he begrudgingly has to admit there might be more to his dad's disappearance than he realised ...
