Three sisters, three dreams – the first instalment in a romantic contemporary New Adult series dealing with mental health and finding oneself and one's place in the world.

Emmi can hardly believe she gets to spend the summer in New Zealand helping out with guided whale watching tours and finally being able to swim with her favourite animals – the ones she found comfort in after a car accident left her mentally and physically scarred. Everything could be perfect and the much needed change of scenery to get out of her head, if it weren't for Valentin, the son of her host family. One moment, he is cold and unapproachable, the next he offers to show her around and to help her overcoming her fear of driving, thoroughly confusing her. And yet, Emmi can't deny that there's something going on between them. What she doesn't know: Valentin is hiding a secret that could shatter Emmi's fragile progress. It's a good thing she can always rely on her sisters, even when they're half a world away ...

Creative People:

Author: Nina Voss was born in 1996 in Lower Saxony and currently lives in Hamburg. She prefers writing her novels in places that throb with life, as interpersonal relationships, which never stop to fascinate her, are at the centre of her stories. If she's not writing a new novel, she loves taking relaxing walks or planning her next trip – because she collects inspiration for her novels' settings and characters from all over the world.
